Why You Should Have Hunting Land Liability Insurance

Whether you are a landowner, or a hunter who leases land or is a member of a hunting club, hunting land liability insurance is essential because both parties assume some legal risk while on a property. Landowners have a duty to guests and those paying to hunt (leaseholders). Hunters need liability insurance to protect themselves, other members of their hunting group, and even guests against acts for which they could be held legally responsible. It is simply not worth risking your personal assets or your family's financial security for unfortunate accidents or acts of others on the property you hunt.

BENEFITS OF THE QDMA POLICY

COVERAGE: It includes the broadest coverage available, including member-to-member coverage, guest coverage, and coverage for many higher-risk activities involving treestands, ATVs and firearms. Many other policies contain hidden exclusions for these activities.

VALUE: It provides the most comprehensive coverage at the lowest possible price to ensure maximum value.

MEMBERSHIP: It includes a complimentary QDMA membership ($35 value) for the primary policy holder and any additionally insured landowners. Some programs require membership fees in addition to policy fees or require all members of a hunting club to join a given organization to receive coverage.

STRENGTH: This program is underwritten by Lloyds of London, one of the world's oldest and most respected insurance companies. All claims are handled in the U.S. through Outdoor Underwriters, Inc. – a team with more than 20 years of experience with hunting land liability insurance.

SERVICE: QDMA, in partnership with Outdoor Underwriters, Inc., is dedicated to providing the best customer service in the industry.

FAQ

- What period does the policy cover and are premiums prorated?
The policy runs from August 1 to August 1 each year. Rates are not prorated if you purchase a policy mid-year.
- Does a hunt club have to be a formal entity with bylaws, membership fees, etc.?
No, any group of hunters can participate, but a group name must be provided to identify who is included in coverage. We recommend, however, that you keep a written record of authorized hunters for your property. The group must have a written lease with each landowner.
- Can landowners take out the policy by themselves if they don't lease the land for hunting but allow friends and family members to hunt?
Yes, but they must prepare a short written document outlining who can hunt and participate in other related activities.
- Does every member of my hunting group have to be a member of QDMA?
No, a QDMA membership is provided to the group member named on the policy and to additionally insured landowners, but individual members are not required to be QDMA members.
- Does the landowner have to be named as an additional insured on the policy?
No, but most landowners require their hunt group to list them on the policy as an additional insured to provide them protection against legal actions resulting from the activities of their hunters. In the case of multiple landowners, every landowner would have to be named as additional insureds. If the land is owned by a company, family trust, or similar entity, only the legal entity would need to be additionally insured.
- What are some exclusions of the policy?
Some examples of exclusions include bodily injury or property damage arising from the use of vehicles, aircraft, pollution, worker's compensation, assault and battery, intentional or expected acts, and commercial hunting operations.
- Are commercial hunting operations, guide services, outfitters or subleased properties eligible for this program?
No, commercial hunting operations, guide services, outfitters or subleased properties are not eligible.
- Explain fire legal liability.
An example of a situation that would be covered is a campfire that gets out of control and burns valuable timber. This coverage does not cover structures such as hunting cabins and houses.
